You may be so focused on getting through the treatment cycle itself, and hoping for a positive pregnancy test, that you may forget to consider what to do in the event of having any embryos left. Katrina marked it as to-read Nov 21, JuneRelatedSearches. It would also be a good idea for medical staff working in this area to read this personal account, to help them understand more clearly exactly what it feels like, physically, mentally and emotionally, to be the patient - too easy to forget, as Tru's experience indicates, when administering IVF is simply your daily routine. Tru and James exchanged panic-stricken looks - before the technician told them he had found another embryo with an equally strong heartbeat.
