Thanks so much for this and for stopping by to read the post! Lydia resents Mr. Verygood2.ImproveThisListing. Irvine argued that for someone like Darcy who lives about half of the year in London, which is a glittering and far-away place for people of Meryton, this proves his social superiority as his "London manners" are described variously in the novel as "fashionable" and "elegant". Don't worry, the place isn't covered in doilies!
