The purpose of this course is to increase the knowledge base of social workers, nurses, physicians and other allied health professionals about elder abuse, assessment, and intervention. Some patients even feel that caregivers treat them differently due to a perceived contrast in conversations between themselves and autochthone patients with the caregivers [334551].

Similarly, parental roles are assumed not only by the biologic parents but also by other family members. Elderly people with a history of geographic mobility are less likely to have developed a strong attachment to place. In these cases, patients feel that caregivers take their health and care seriously [62]. This will be illustrated on the basis of three sub-dimensions i.
