Courses by Topic. They use this power to deceptively gain control over the decision making of the second person. This should not be a concern, but rather a relief.

From a psychological perspective, a loss of trust in others has been identified. Although not systematically assessed, losing assets accumulated over a lifetime, often through hard work and deprivation, can be devastating, with significant practical and psychological consequences Dessin, ; Nerenberg, c; Smith, It is not about a parent ordering a child to do what they want, but more relieving their children of the burden when the time comes.

Elder or older adult financial abuse is the most common form of abuse against CPAs. Greater attention to this issue has been attributed to increases in the number of elderly people, an increased emphasis on care at home, and the substantial resources of the elderly Langan and Means,
