For critical writing about the play, you should use the Casebook anthology. This view is anticipated by the pair of six-line stanzas spoken by Helena and Hermia at the end of Act 3.

Bottom's usual simple tastes folk-song, the tongue and bones are mixed with humor. When Pyramus thinks a lion has killed Thisbe, he kills. To which the retort comes: "So will I grow, so live, so die", rather than yield to Demetrius' claim.

In this play, there are further reasons for confusion, beyond the effect of love. The lover "sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt", the madman sees imaginary devils, while the poet gives vivid expression to airy nothing". We note, however, that as the young lovers' dissension moves to passion and the threat of violence, the playwright returns to blank verse.
